First Regiment Drill by Moonlight.

Militiamen March to Makiki in Command of Lieutenant-Colonel McCarthy.

With flags flying, drums beating and rifles gleaming in the soft moonlight, the First Regiment, National Guard of Hawaii, marched to the baseball grounds at Makiki last evening for regiment drill headed by Lieutenant-Colonel McCarthy who assumed command in the absence of Colonel Jones. At the drill shed previous to the formation of the companies for inspection the scene was a busy one. In each company's room the soldiers were ea-というようのできるのようのは本のの本ののようのできるなからな

LIEUT.-COLONEL McCARTHY.

なのでもない。そのできなな事のなかなのかなの本なの本なのである gerly burnishing their equipments, brushing their blouses and otherwise making themselves trim for the inspection of the Lieutenant-Colonel who is a stickler for appearance. The drum and bugle corps was out in force and drums | cultural $300. were tightened up for the occasion, bugles polished until they glinted, and all the panoply of war donned for the moonlight review.

When the assembly bugle sounded and the troops formed by companies in the armory hall their appearance evoked favorable comment from their regimental officers. Dressed in blue blouse, spotless white trousers, brown leggings and fatigue cap, they were a soldierlylooking lot of men and spoke volumes for the care of the officers.

"A" company, Captain Klemme, turned out well, very few names not being answered at roll call. "B" company had a fair showing, and "C" company was represented by only a corporal's guard. "F," "G," and "H" companies were in force. The troops formed in talion work was effective, the two majors having perfect command of their respective battalions.

Col. McCarthy was well pleased with the drill inasmuch as it is the first regimental dress review in eleven months, the last having taken place in October, 1899. In November, on Thanksgiving Day, the Punahou sham battle occurred and since that time the regiment went into active service during the plague epidemic. The long slege of street and quarantine patrolling ruled against further regimental drills. It is the purpose of the Colonel to have regimental drills each month during moonlight week. The behavior and appearance of the guardsmen last night ereated a favorable impression among a number of strangers who viewed the march and drill.
